'Dirty Tricks' Tip Held Baseless

White House Clears Rockefeller

By Christopher Lydon

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 (NYT), The White House announced vesterday that a tip linking Meison Rockefeller, the former governor of New York, to dirty tricks" in the 1972 presidential campaign was dismissed as baseless after an investigation by the special Watergate prosecutor.

J.F. terBorst, President Ford's press secretary, declared in one of a number of briefings on the matter yesterday that the tip had been the work of "extremists who wished for reasons of their own to discredit Gov. Rockefeller." He said the investigation had been "completely closed" and would have no further bearing un Mr. Bord's choice of a successor

Mr. terBorst identified himself as the source of wire-service dispatches, widely distributed under an "urgent" heading yesterday morning, quoting an un-named White House official to the effect that the special prosecutor's office was investigating allegations that Mr. Rockefeller had helped fund a project to disrupt the 1972 Democratic National Convention with bired

Mr. terHorst explained that he had been responding to questions raised by Jack Anderson in a syndicated column that said secret files, thought to have been destroyed long ago, from the White House office of Howard Hunt ir, one of the convicted Watergate burglars, drew the connection between Mr. Rockefeller and the disruptions in 1972. In fact, however, Mr. terHorst said, the special prosecutor's of-fice had already determined that the charges against Mr. Rocke-feller were unfounded. This determination was made when locked boxes, held in a bank vault in an unidentified city and supposed to hold copies of Hunt's files, were found to be empty.

Philip Buchen, Mr. Pord's legal commel confirmed yesterday that the original tip about the Hunt

Road South Is Only One Still Open

NICOSIA, Aug. 18 (UPI). Many Greek Cypriots fled from Nicosia today after President Glafkos Clerides said that Turkish troops planned to cut off the capital from the rest of Cyprus.

Turkish tanks and troops severed the road from Nicosia to Larnaca on the southeastern coast today after capturing the town of Pyroi, eight miles from Nicosia, last night in violation of the cease-fire.

"Turkey is siming to cut off the capital from the rest of Cyprus." Mr. Clerides said in a televisico mierriew.

His words and the Turkish action touched nff a flight of Greek Cypriots along the road south, to Limassol, the ooly one

The government later appealed to citizens not to panic, but the steady exodus of cars loaded with household goods continued.
Thousands of people rush about aimlessly... complicating an already complicated situation."

Mr. Clerides said. He charged that the Turks wented to isolate Nicosia and gain control of all of Cyprus, not just the 1,200-square-mile northern chunk of the island they captured in the fighting that followed the breakdown of the Geneva peace talks last week.

Mr. Clerides forecast that if the Turks continued to advance, resistance would continue and in the end the Greek Cypriots would probably be driven into the hills where we will have to make our 'last stand."

The Tunks appeared noised for a push to the Limessoi road, a move that would isolate Nicosia from the rest of the island. All other highways from the capital under Turkish control. Unit-Nations sources said.

Mr. Clerides protested the violation of the cease-fire and "expressed the hope that the Turkish government would order its commander in Cyprus to stop these attacks." a spokesman said.

He said Mr. Clerides had informed the UN military coor-mander, Maj. Gen. Prem Chand, that the National Guard was under orders to exercise the 'utmost restraint and not to fire on Turkish forces, to prevent any escalation of the situation." Mr. Clerides said the Turks had taken advantage of this situation and had continued their attacks,

Israel Arrests an Archbishop On Arms-Smuggling Charge

JERUSALEM, Ang. 18 (UPI).— Police today arrested the Greek Catholic erchbishop of Jerusalem, the Most Rev. Hilarian Capucci, on charges of smuggling weapons to Arab guerrilles operating in Israeli-occupied territory.

A police spokesman said the archbishop was being held on suspicion of acting as a liaison man and gunrumer between the el-Fatah guerrilla headquarters in Lebanon and guer-rillas in Judea and Samaria of the occupied West Bank of Jordan and the Jerusalem region. Archbishop Capucci has been in Israel since 1965. The Greek Catholic Church is part of the Roman Catholic Church and recognizes the authority of the Pope in Rome in contrast to the Greek Orthodox Church, which answers to its Chief Patriarch in

Although the spokesman said the archbishop was arrested today, police sources said he was first taken into custody Wednes-day when he crossed from Lebanon into Israel at the Rosh Hanikra horder checkpoint.

The sources said officers found machine guns, revolvers, hand ung Arab guerrillas who planted

The sources said he was questioned for a few hours and released, but kept under surveillance. Newsmen learned of the incident but were prevented from reporting it by Israeli military censorship

The archhishop, born in Aleppo, Syria, first came under suspicion several weeks ago when he reported the theft of $75,000, the national radio said. It said a police investigation indicated that $750,-900 had been stolen and that officers were suspicious that such a large sum of money might have some connection with guerrilla activities.

Archbishop Capucci shared his religious duties in Israel with the Most Rev. Joseph Raya. According to officials in the Religious Affairs Ministry, they have more than 30,000 Arab Christian foilowers in Israel. His arrest was not the first

Meanwhile, the garrison's only source of supply is from the air. Almost every day American transport planes from Thailand and Cambodian transports from Phnom Penh drop supplies by parachute—arms, ammunition, food, medicines, But because the planes fly high to avoid being shot down - particularly those flown hy Americans, who want to avoid at all costs the political emharrassment of losing planes or pilots in Indochina-some of the drops are inaccurate and float into insurgent hands. The Americans estimate that 15 to 20 per cent of the supplies are lost this way. Other estimates put the losses higher.

Insurgent troops have been captured carrying not only American-made weapons, but also a special malaria pill. The insurgents, too, have a serious malaria problem. They are also suffering their share of battle losses.

"Every time they've come out in the open and tried a ground attack, they've had their behinds whipped," said Col. Douglas Roysden, the air attache at the Amer-

Why doesn't the garrison surrender, foreign observers living safely in Phnom Penh ask. No has any answer, hut perhaps It is for the same reasons that men have refused to surrender in other wars-pride, spirit, fear slaughter by the enemy.

Cairo Held Short Of Arms Parts

BEIRUT, Aug. 18 (AP).—Egypt was reported yesterday to be suffering a serious shortage of military spare parts as a result of Soviet suspension of supplies to the Egyptian Army since the October Middle East war. The Arab World, an authoritative daily news digest of Middle Eastern affairs, said 75 T-62 tanks and as many MiG-21 jet fighters were unserviceable. It quoted diplomatic sources in Beirut as saying there has been no replenishment of the Egyptian

A statement issued by Mr. Clerides's office later said that the Cyprus government and its armed forces "have respected and accepted fully every resolution of the UN Security Council for a cease-fire." The cease-fire that went into effect Friday is the third in a month and Mr. Clerides has charged that the Turks violated all three to expand the territory under their control

The UN spokesman said negotiators had arranged for Greek Cypriot soldiers to recover the bodies of comrades killed in the three-day battle near Nicosia airport, which ended Friday. He had no figures on the total dead. but five trucks were bringing out the bodies during a three-day period that started yesterday, the spokesman said.

A new threat to Nicosia came when Turkish authorities refused to allow UN troops to escort Greek Cypriot technicians to Turkish-occupied Morphou to repair water pumps. Mr. Clerides appealed to the UN high commissioner for refugees to aid the more than 200,000 persons he said had been dispiaced during the Turkish invasion.

"What we urgently need are field kitchens, bakeries and hospitals," a government spokesman said. "For those in the mountainous area, we need blankets and fuel for warmth. I have seen children being born and dying." There were new allegations of atrocities from the Greek Cypriot side today. The government arranged interviews with six young women who said they had been raped by Turkish soldiers every day for a week. No medical evidence to support the charge was presented. Support for Early Meeting

Little Expertise

Nor was there great expertise among the four men recruited by Mr. Ford to plan the new White House operation. Mr. Rumsfeld, the coordinator of the group, had been a counselor to former President Nixon for a year and at different times headed the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Cost of Living Council, both executive office agencies.

Mr. Morton had a cabinet-member's view of the Nixon oper-ations. Mr. Scranton had done one brief survey of executive branch organization in the first year of the Nixon administration. Mr. Marsh was a member of Mr. Ford's vice-presidential staff.

More significantly, all four share with Mr. Ford the common bond of being former members of the House and are intimately familiar with Capitol Hill compiaints about the overgrown size and power of presidential staffs in recent administrations.

The new President told them Thursday "he liked what we were doing and just go ahead on that track," one of the members the group said Friday

Mr. Brandon's suit declares that the papers were produced by persons, including Mr. Nixon, wbo were all on the public payroll, and that, therefore, there is no basis for asserting private ownership. This is the aspect of the suit that potentially affects the papers of all public officials.

That assertion rests upon the fact that Mr. Nixon never signed the deed of gift and upon an assertion that the man who did, Edward Morgan, former White House deputy counsel, lacked the authority to do so. Mr. Nixon's attempt to postpone the date of access to the papers shows that he is still exercising rights of ownership, Mr. Brandon

The tradition that access to all or part of such documents may be limited for a number of years is also long established. But it is a tradition rather than

Kleindienst Wins First Battle In Fight to Keep Law License

By Fimothy S. Robinson

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 (WP). -Former U.S. Attorney General Richard Kleindienst has won the first major hettle in his fight to keep his law license. A threejudge federal panel refused to discipline him for his plea of guilty to charges of refusing to testify fully during his Senate confirmation hearings.

The three judges, belonging to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, found Friday that "no disciplinary action is warranted" against the former attorney general, a decision that allows Kleindienst, for the time being at least, to continue to practice law in federal

Mr. Kleindienst, however, is also a member of the local bar, which is supervised by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, and whose disciplinary arm is investigating the possibility of acting against him.

The Arizona Bar also is considering possible disciplinary ac-tion against him in that state. Should the District of Columhis Bar decide that disciplinary action is warranted, and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals concurs, Kleindienst could face the loss of his right to practice before any court in Washington.

The Court of Appeals issued a brief ruling last month saying that Kleindienst's offense was not a "serious crime" and, therefore, did not require automatic suspension. At the same time, it referred the case to the bar unit.

Back to the 'Politicians'

Gen. Semith Sancar, chief of the Turkish general staff, commented on Saturday that the Turkish Army had launched the second stage of its operations in Cyprus-which, of course, was done in the teeth of Turkey's own accession to the July 30 cease-fire agreement-after the island's problems had been "left for a week to the politicians:" that contemptuous reference to the Geneva negotiations is enough to make the world wonder just where sources of authority in Turkey lie, at present, as well as just what portions of the heritage of Kemai Ataturk survive in the nation he did so much to shape.

For "politicians" would seem to represent the civilian government, as well as the diplomats who represent it, and Ataturk, while he used war boldly and effectively to save Turkey from the worst effects of World War I and the collapse of the Ottoman Empire, incuicated a brand of foreign policy that viewed war as a last resort, not something to be used as wantonly as Ankara has done in recent weeks.

In fact, Turkey's last full-scale war ended with the defeat of Greece and the acknowledgement of the present boundaries of Turkey in 1923. Turkey did declare war on Germany in 1945, but that was a formality. It did send a brigade to fight, and fight well, in Korea; losses there were about three times those suffered so far in the Cyprus adventure. But that was part of an international force. One is tempted to suspect that the Turks, unlike so much of the rest of the world, had forgotten (as Kemal Ataturk never did the high costs of war, and that they only remember that Ataturk's armies reversed the diplomacy of the Treaty of Sèvres by the Treaty of Lausanne, and thus were a major factor in transforming the sick man of Europe into the very healthy man of Asia Minor.

The Turkish Army is sending the question back to the politicians. It controls enough of the island to form a basis for partition. or a bargaining point for a cantonal system. But if it has thereby strengthened the hands of its own politicians in some respects, it has crippled those of the Greek politicians, and embarrassed the leaders of NATO in any attempt to secure a legitimate, workable way of life for the Cypriots.

And such a solution cannot be imposed by Turkish arms alone. If the Turks doubt it, they have only to look at the innumerable instances in the modern world where force has sought, or is seeking, to cure the ills of an ethnically or ideologically divided territory-from Vietnam to Ireland, with waystops in the Indian subsoutinent, the Middle East and many of the modern African states. "The politicians," even the ablest of them. can be baffled by the ability of minoritles to confront majorities under modern conditions. But when the soldiers take over, they usually make matters worse, until they confess-like De Gaulle, the Portuguese military. and the Greek generals-the errors of the military approach. It is time, and more than time, for the pollticiana to try and do something constructive about Cyprus Tha task is most difficult, but there can be no purely military solution that does not raise more questions than it answers.

The United States and its allies cannot condone Turkey's military conquest of the northern third of Cyprus in flagrant violatioo of United Nations cease-fire orders and NATO pledges reiterated by Ankara at Ottawa less than two months ago. To accept Turkey's aggression as a fait accompli would be to invite an endless period of bloodshed on the island and to risk collapse of the Western security system in the eastern Mediterranean.

What Turkey has set out to do is to impose unilaterally and by force a "solution" it has long advocated for Cyprus: partition of the island, under whatever name and however dressed up subsequently by a powerless paper structure called "federation." This "solution" is unacceptable to a half-million Greek Cypriots and to nine million mainland Greeks. It cannot possibly work.

Whatever border Turkey may draw across Cyprus by way of defending its territorial grab wili surely be one of the most explosive frontiers on earth. On both sides of that border an underground, which Britain was dust to settle on Cyprus. The danger is too incapable of eliminating in pre-independ- great that Greece may be lost as a friend ence days, will soon be flourishing with far greater support than ever before from the embittered Greek Cypriot majority. Life will be hazardous for any Turkish Cypriot.

It is not merely-or even primarilybecause of the Cyprus situation itself that Turkey must not be allowed to get by with ita conquest, however. Ankara's action has plunged the North Atlantic Treaty Organization into the worst internal crisis since its creation 25 years ago. It has not only disintegrated NATO's southern flank; it risks the loss of Greece to the West.

When Greece's war council ordered withdrawal of its forces from NATO it noted that it acted only "after the Atlantic alliance has demonstrated its inability to prevent Turkey from creating a state of conflict between two allies." The approbation given this division by Greeks of all political persuasions and the anti-American demonstrations over Washington's failure to curb Turkey indicate the dimensions of the kind, is coming up in the House Tuesday for President Ford. If he follows the sound national policy he inherited, he will put his administration's weight behind a proposition he voted against as a member of the House.

The issue is Rhodeslan chrome. Since 1965, the United States has supported the trade sanctions voted against the former British colony by the United Nations. Three years ago, however, despite that official commitment. Congress enacted the "Byrd amendment, sponsored by Sen. Harry Byrd, Ind-Va., authorizing Americans to buy Rhodesian chrome. Mr. Ford voted for the Byrd amendment, apparently accepting tho argument that Rhodeslan chrome keeps the United States from becoming unduly dependent on imports of Soviet chrome. Moreover, while he was Vice-President. Mr. Ford rejected suggestions by othes Nixon administration officials and interested legislators that it help the administration secure repeal of the Byrd amendment. The latest such repeal effort passed the Senate last December and will arrive on the House floor on

Rhodesian chrome is not a simple issue. There are, however, two broad considerations oo which there is substantial room for agreement. First, the Byrd amendment has hecome a symbol, to many Americans and to the black-ruled African nations, of official United States support for white-minority rule in Africa. It is an embarrassment to our national values and to our diplomacy. Not everyone agrees that sanctions are a good idea but no one can deny that the Byrd amendment damages our relations with a score of African states whose goodwill and—res—resources are of value to us. Whether Rhodeslan chrome would still be

A nice test, apparently the first of its available if the Smith government in Salisbury and a racially representative government came to power is also a fair question. Airicans are asking whether it was only by accident that, in Mr. Ford'a address to Congress last Monday, theirs was the only major region of the world not mentioned specifically by name.

The Byrd amendment also has become something of a test whether the United States-and by extension, every other nation -will honor its commitments undertaken at the United Nations. If it becomes established practice that a government's word given at the United Nations can be taken back at home, then the world body loses even a faint prospect of doing its necessary job. The United States, as a founder of the United Nations and as one of the principal prospective beneficiarles of the conditions it seeks to promote, has its interest as well as its reputation to uphold in seeing to it that this violation of its commitment is put to an end. The United States is the only country in tha world which has formally and officially undereut its United Nations stand, on any issue, in this way.

Mr. Ford bad hardly entered the White House wheu, in a message to the secretary general, ho pledged "continued American support for the United Nations" and offered the world body his personal respects. As a result of his own earlier position on the Byrd amendment, however, a cloud hovers over his pledge. It would probably make the crucial difference in the uphill repeal fight in the House If Mr. Ford were to Indicate that be has reviewed his position in the light of his new presidential perceptions and responsibilities. To do otherwise, in our view, would be to persist in what might be called a foolish consistency.

For Reedy, who has a long experience as a reporter and staff officer in Congress and as President Johnson's press secretary in tho White House, argues in this hook that the White House is an elegant trap which surrounds the president with flattery and machinery that distort his judgment by removing him from reality.

This was a prophetic book. It was published in 1970 long before the downfall of President Mixon. but it defines with remarkable feresight the dangers of secrecy, conspiracy and isolation that fi-nally brought Nixon down.

What presidents need, Reedy suggests, is not to be protected by a young adoring White House staff and a timid Cabinet that tells him nothing except what he wants to hear, but to be confronted by the hard facts and to be told once in a while by men beyond the age of ambition that he's not only wrong but "stupid."

Ford probably likes the Reedy book because it supports his natural way of doing things. He was never in much danger of locking himself up in the White House like Nixon. Over the weekend he has been asking Klassheer for the awkward facts on Cyprus. inviting men and women of all persuasions to the White House, even reporters, and finding time to play golf, which is a torture that reminds all men of their im-

Other Problems

But this is just the beginning of the problem. After you avoid Isolation from reality within the White House, open up the doors, invite honest dissent from the White House staff, the Cabinet, the Congress and the press, what do you do about the fundamental realities of inflation at home and hunger, monetary chaos and miliaggression abroad?

All the people coming through these open White House doors now are impressed by the friendliness and good will on the other side, but King Hussein of Jordan who was there over the weekend, has one vity of "reality" in the Mediterranean and the Middle East, and many of the other guests bave a different view.

In just a few days, the new President has made great progress primarily because he was not Richard Nixon, but looked like Ike and sounded like Harry Truman. He has changed the style

WASHINGTON-President Ford of the White House and revived the spirit of the country. Now he has to deal with the larger realities of policy, and decide where he's going and who's going

> Perhaps the coming question is how his view of the nation and the world will be changed by his new responsibility. Every day since he has been in the White House, he has invited Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to brief him for at least an hour on ona foreign problem at a time. The outcome of this will be interesting, since Kissinger is for cutting the military budget and the President is for keeping it

Contradictory Advice

Ford will be doing the same close questioning with other members of his Cabinet on other sub-iccls. He has heard much coutradictory advice before on the state of the nation and the world, as Vice-President and for 25 years in the Congress, but now he has to decide, as Harry Truman had to decide after the death of Poosevelt, and as Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan had to decide after he became chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in the critical days after the last world war.

The Vandenberg Connection with Ford is interesting. They both came from Grand Rapids. In the formative years of Ford's political career in the House, Sen. Vandenberg was a towering figure first in Michigan and then in national and world politics.

Vandenberg started as an aggressive nationalist and isolationist, but as the world changed and his role in politics changed, he also changed from a party and regional man to a leader in the hipartisan transformation of American policy. This had a profound effect on Ford's own philosophy on U.S. responsibility for maintaining peace in the world. The question now is whether Ford as President will change his views on domestic policy, on the military budget, on how to deal with inflation, high prices, wages, and the plight of the poor and the old, who are the principal victims of the present economic and financial crisis.

Beyond this lies a related but even more ominous problem. Ford, like Vandenberg, has accepted the policy of collective military security to avoid world war. But the emerging problem is not military but economic security: What to do about the rising price of food and other raw materials, how to avoid disruption through inflation in the advanced countries and mass starvation in

There is nothing in Ford's voting record to suggest that ha is prepared to grapple yet with these momentous questions. He is a conservative faced with radical problems, a big defense budget man confronted with either cutting the military budget or the social services or something else. In short, he will have no trouble accepting George Reedy's advice to stay loose and available and listen to the facts, but the "facts" and the "realities" are formidable and will force him, as they did Vandenberg from his own hometown, to reappraise his whola economic philosophy, or as Lincoln said, to think anew as our conditions are new.

economic clouds are casting their shadow over the image many Americans have of their country as a society still relatively open to foreigners who may wish to come and live, work or study here. WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 (NYT). -The commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, Alexander Schmidt, has promised a thorough review of charges level-ed against his agency Thursday by 14 research workers, physicians and consultants.

Mr. Schmidt told a joint meeting of twn Senate subcommittees that he thought most of the prohlems had occurred before he took office 13 mouths ago. He also said there might be other explanations that were "quite reasonable" for agency actions that were criticized.

The 14 witnesses told of pressure, harassent, files leaked to drug companies and transfers when they recommended against new drugs proposed for FDA ap-

Mr. Schmidt said he thought it would be "tragic indeed" if public confidence in the agency "or the morale of thousands of dedicated FDA employees" were undermined by the testimony. But he conceded that the witnesses included eight of 80 medical officers who handle new drug

Mr. Schmidt said the agency will "follow up on each and every complaint." He added that "procedures at the agency have been changed and are being

The Gallup Poll found that 46 per cent of those surveyed believed the nation was headed toward a depression such as the one expertenced in the 1930s. Generally, the people interviewed voiced a sense of helplessness in 'reversing' the trend toward ever-higher inflation. Many said the problems of the consumer had become overwhelming,

"I feel there's a shadow of hopelessness over the whole country," said Mrs. Val Sokoly of Milwaukee, who works part time as a bus driver. "My friends feel the same way. There's a feeling of gloom and despair. And it's hurting the poor people most of all. I don't have any solution. I only hope he has."

Some of those interviewed indicated that, no matter how honorable Mr. Ford's intentions might be, the means of reversing inflation might not be totally in his hands.

MOSCOW (NYT).—Even from a distance they seem to scrape against beaven. Close up, they tower into baffling combinations of ice, rock and snow.

The Pamirs, sprawling from the Soylet Union into China, Kashmir and Afghanistan, represent more than just another remote mountain range. Their geographical and political inaccessibility has for years fascinated travelers, particularly mountain climbers.

Last month, for the first time, an American expedition was permitted into the recesses of the Pamirs, which dominate the Central Asian republics of Kirghizia and Tadzhikistan. The occasion was an international mountaineering camp run for Western

One storm would take the lives of an entire experienced Alpine team of Russian women. But even se a dozen Americans would reach the summit of 23,400-foot Lenin Peak, the third highest in the Soviet Union.

A cluster of women and children swathed in bright colors surveys us from the shade of one wall. No pictures, we are informed. No Soviet airport may be photographed.

We have flown all night from Moscow, changing planes in the town of Osh. Now we load into three trucks for the trip upcountry, over rolling meadows and dry river beds to our base camp at 12,000 feet. The bone-jarring trip lasts three hours. The tires spin up plumes of dust that cake our ears, eyes and mouths,

Peak Looms

Mountain climbers from 10 nations are converging on the camp . . . We all stagger under the same heavy packs. There are 70 Austrians and two climbers from Liechtenstein. The camp is being run by the Soviet mounteineering federation for $750 a climber, reportedly to raise foreign currency to send Soviet climbers abroad . . Herds of sheep, horses and cattle, tended by Kirghiz herdsmen, graze casually around us. High on the slopes, there are herds of balf-wild yaks. When we walk down to the herders' yurts, they force kumiss, warm fermented mare's milk, on us. Some of us get sick.

But we are always conscious of Lenin Peak above us, rising 23,400 feet. At night it blocks the early moon. The peak has been climbed perhaps more than any other mountain its size-nearly 1,300 climbers by the time we arrive-but its presence still continues to fascinate . . .

Offered Coins at Premium

Heads-Up Penny Transaction Turned a Profit for Brothers

By E. Hamilton Malley There was some competition,

NEW YORK (NYT).—Last December, my brother Arthur and I decided to pool our talents in a spare-time effort to meet inflation head on-with pennies. We drew upon my qualifications as an actor and his as a Harvard Business School man headed for the management-training program at First National City Bank.

The penny business boomed. Working an area stretching from New York City to the Canadian border, we put together a $30,000 stockpile of 'Lincolns' and began offering them, at a negotiated premium, to penny-short retail

From mid-April to the middle of this month, our turnover exceeded $55,000 worth of pennies. The premiums obtained ranged from 20 to 32 per cent, enabling us to average about $450 a week

Inirinsic Value

The attraction of the penny is that, with a 95 per cent copper content, it is the only remaining U.S. coin with an intrinsic value approaching its stated value, and the intrinsic value has been rising dramatically.

Gold was eliminated from our domestic monetary system in 1934. Silver coins stopped heing minted in 1965 as the price of the metal made it unprefitable to produce them. The silver coins are now selling at three to four times face valoe and more were melted for resale as hullion in January and February of this year than in all of 1972. Copper, which was used in the first coins minted in the United States, in 1793, showed a stable price treud until recently. It was 32.4 cents a pound in 1960, but this year hit a high of $1.34 a pound before settling back to about 85 cents a pound.

It has been estimated that the U.S. Mint begins losing money on pennies when copper hits $1.25 a pound

Not Legal

It is neither legal, under a law passed last spring, nor profitable. until the metal hits an estimated $1.50 a pound, for non-Mint personnel to melt down pennies. But, mindful of what happened when a two-year han on such melting was lifted in 1969, people oegan looking at the lowly cent climb Lenin Peak by a tested route, then swing south to some untouched peaks. Another team, led by John Evans, from Denver, will try to push a new route up the sheer east face of Lenin Peak.

A third team, headed by Robert Craig, from Aspen, Colo., will attempt a first ascent of the north face of 19th Party Congress Peak, 19,200 feet high. The peak was named for a Communist party convention held in 1952.

The fourth team, led by Jocelyn Glidden, a philosophy proessor from Ogden, Utah, will ascend peak 6852 by a new route, then traverse over the summit to Lenin Peak. I join this team. Peak 6852 was named for its height in meters, or 22,475 feet.

Dizzying Height

To reach peak 6852, we must climb over 19,000-foot Krylenko Pass, which separates Lenin Peak and Spartak Peak. As we move up the snow face, the altituda leaves me dizzy. We flop our load at a camp at 17,500 feet and go back down for another load. The next day we return.

The camp is on the edge of a crevasse, under a serac-or ice cliff. We meet the Evans group there. Their stove has broken down and four of them are descending to have it repaired.

Two climbers from the team stay with us. Jeff Lowe, of Gunnison, Colo., has twisted his knee. And Pete Lev, an avalanche ranger from Alta, Utah, is eager watch the snow conditionsslab crust over loose sugar snow and ice-that present a potential avalanche hazard. He taps his altimeter and notes that the pressure is dropping.

We hear two loud cracks beneath our feet, as if the crevasse has shifted. There is dead silence. It is 1:26 p.m.

And then it thunders down over us-ton upon ton of snow. Some team members jump or are blown into the crevasse, which is filling with snow. I am knocked to my hands and knees. Everything goes dark as the snow pours over the serac overhead. It rises and hardens around me. I try to flall away for breathing space while coughing the powder from my mouth. I cannot see and can barely breathe. It lasts a full minute. Then it is ended, the biggest avalanche I have ever seen It has ripped up a slope 1,000 feet wide and at least 4,000 feet long. Below us, snow debris is piled 30 feet deep. Only later do we learn that an earthquake triggered the slide.

'Who's missing?" someone is frantically shouting. I try to push myself free of the wet snow and look about. Everyone is there. It seems incredible that no one was swept away . . .

We help dig each other out. Jeff Lowe is buried nearly to his waist. The ice serac deflected the full fury of the avalanche over our heads, at the least several hundred thousand tons of snow, we calculate later.

"Oh, my God," one climber keeps saying. "Oh, my God."

[Editor's Note. The party digs

itself out of the mess. Much of the geor has been lost, but no one has been swept away. But the jour climbers of the Evans group who had gone back down to repair their stove are missing. [Wren's group searched for them, but without success. But the four Americans survived ond ore found in o camp of Jopanese and Scottish hikers forther down. Mr. Wren's party returns to base comp, where it learns the weather is the worst in 25 years. The Russians begin colling all climb-ers back to comp. the spot where Mr. Ullin died

We start up the direct northeast route, cutting a few ice steps. It is not difficult. When the snow becomes too soft, we stop at about 16,600 feet. We are joined on part of our next day's ascent hy a balf-dozen Polish climbers. The slope becomes trickier, perhaps because the weather is worsening again and the altitude has exhausted We leave the Poles and traverse under the face to the northeast ridge. A new storm cavelops us. We have to grope for the trail. Thunder echoes in the clouds below us. At last we reach the ridge and pitch our tents at 19,300 feet.

It is storming too hard to move the next day. Several French and English climbers descend from the summit ridge. They pitch their tents next to ours, because of the avalanche bazard

Stopped by Snow

We break camp the next morning and slowly climb the rocky ridge. A party of descending Soviet climbers tells us that a Soviet women's team is pushing to the summit above us.

We gain the summit ridge. But the snow is blowing harder and soon we can go no higher. We pitch our teut in a white expanse, knowing only that it is at nearly 22,000 feet.

I do not really know how many days we are there, isolated from the world by a storm that seems to grow only worse. I think it is three nights, but Jock Glidden believes it is two. We try to contact base camp several times with our Soviet radio but the distance is too far. The next day dawns sunny and cold, exactly what we had wanted. By now, we are drawn to the summit hy instinct, for our mental and physical alertness has deteriorated at such high altitudes. As we set out, a gust carries me several feet, but soon the wind subsides. Another group of climbers, six Japanese, come into view and we take turns in Within three hours, we are at the last steep snow face that leads to the summit itself. The Japanese have halted. A body is stretched on the snow before us. With a chill of recognition, know it is Elvira Shatayeva, the women's team leader with whom I sat and talked one evening several weeks earlier.

Experienced Climbers

The Russians, who were not officially part of our camp, had impressed me as a spirited and competent group, not the sort to court trouble on the mountains. I had half expected to rely upon them if we ran into difficulty

The Japanese produce a radio and call base camp. We are instructed to look for the other members of the team. We spread out and begin climbing the slope. As we climb, we find them one by one, frozen in a desperate act of escape. Only the eighth woman is missing, apparently blown over the rocks of the summi They still wear their parkas, goggles and even crampons on their icy boots.

"They died because of the weather, not because they were a Soviet climber emwomen," phesized later.

Only after we descend does a sketchy story unfold. The women had set out on a fast, tough traverse of the mountain. On Aug. 5, they camped on the summit of Lenin Peak. The storm enveloped them. Two days later they radioed that one woman had died, two others were ill and their tents were destroyed. They were instructed to come down immediately. But the storm, later termed a burricane in the official Soviet inquiry, intensified. That same afternoon the women radioed that they were able to descend only a few hundred feet in the swirling snow.

By then, three had died. Three more were unable to move. Only two could still try. In their last radio exchange with base camp, they were exhorted to be courageous, a friend there told me. But their equipment had been scattered by the wind and they could not dig out a snow cave to survive the storm.

"Good-bye," they said, "we will

On to Summit

Although we were barely 1,000 feet below them, our radio was not calibrated to their frequency and we knew nothing about their plight at the time. Now our search leads us to the summit, bedecked with a large silver plaque of Lenin and other mementos borne up by previous parties. The view is spectacular. To the sonthwest rises Communism Peak, once Stalin Peak, at 24,590 feet the highest mountain in the Soviet Union. To the east are the pale blue waters Lake Karakul, more than 12,000 feet high. Beyond, the snowy mountains recede into China's Sinking Province. snap the traditional summit photos, but we are anxious to get down. As we descend the face, balancing on the front points of our crampons, we mark the seven bodies with willow wands that we had brought to ont along our route.

Hallucination

Later, back in the tent, we are visited by a hallucination. Jock and I bear what sounds like the plaintive voice of a girl outside. But each time we go out to look, we find only the tent lines squeaking against the snow . . . we head down the next morning . . . It is hard to walk off the mountain. My feet refuse to move in a straight line. But before dark, we are again on the solld glacial moraine. In little more than a day, we have dropped nearly 10,000 vertical feet.

I have set down what I saw happen, yet I worry that it offers a darker side of mountaineering. After all, 12 Americans stood on the summit of Lenin Peak, Two others accomplished the first ascent on the north face of 19th-Party Congress Peak . . . It is tragic that 15 deaths overtook us in the Pamirs-the 15th was a Swiss woman climber who died of hypothermia on Lenin Peak's west ridge—and that nearly all were beyond our control. Part of the tragedy is that they numbed the subtler senses of discovery of the mountains and of our-

We left the Pamirs, lurching down the valley in the trucks one bright dawn. Behind us the mountains, wiped clean of the clouds, sparkled brazenly.

Persuading the Japanese to Behave Overseas

By Kathryn Tolbert

TOKYO (AP),-The Japanese government-nothing less than I the Premier's office—is giving tourist tips on eliquette and behavior to Japanese travelers. It is another effort to reduce complaints from abroad about their conduct.

In this summer holiday season, 400,000 Japanese are expected to leave the country before fall, generating hard feelings in some of the places they visit.

The Premier's office is the latest government agency to enter the battle against the Japanese tourists' occasionally offensive behavior, issuing an advice-filled article now appearing in 12 popular weekly magazines.

With cartoon illustrations, it reminds prospective travelers to allow "ladles first" in Western countries, to avoid slurping one's soup and to refrain from singing old Japanese military songs in Southeast Asia, which Japan once conquered.

Political Taboos

The article also advises against taking materials on Communism to Turkey, South Korea, Indonesia, Malaysia and some South American countries. And it says not to take books and pamphlets on capitalism to Eastern Europe, where tourists also are forbidden to photograph the army, airports or harbors or to take pictures from an airplane.

Do not discuss religion in Moslem countries, the article advises, nor politics where the government is unstable.

The left hand is considered dirty and disrespectful in the Middle East, India, Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia, it cays, and warns travelers to use the right hand in greetings and in giving and receiving gifts.

The Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Transportation have published similar advice in the past, discouraging Japanese travelers from wearing nightclothes in hotel hallways, although this practice is acceptable at home, or from going to nightclubs in large groups.

Changing Natures

"One of the characteristics of the Japanese abroad is that as a single person he is kind and naive, but when in a big group his nature changes," Zazus Akiyama, a Japan Travel Bureau executive, said.
"In the strength of a group he is liable to forget himself as a person who should be responsible for his actions. He will pass the buck to the group. We Japanese don't have a publicconscious mind." The travel bureau, this country's largest, gives every client besded overseas a brockure on manners and eliquette. It advises Japanese that they should follow the eating habits of others at their table, say "Excuse me" when bamping into people and lock doors at night.

The Japan Travel Bureau also published a book in Pebruar called "Well-Mannered Japanese Tourists," illustrated by will known cartoonist Sampel Sato. It has sold more than 102,000

Mideast Still Seethes Beneath Deceptively Placid Surface to troop-separation talks

By Terence Smith

JERUSALEM (NYT).-By Middle Eastern standards, the 12 weeks that have elansed since the Isrzeli-Syrian troop-separation agreement was signed have been tranquil time. There has been the odd skirmish on the Lebanese border and the occasional shelling of suspected Palestinian guerrilla targets by Israeli gunboats. But in this fractious corner of the world that sort of activity passes for peace.

By common consensus, however, the surface calm is misleading Neither time nor the flow of events in the area has stood still since the formal fighting came to an end on May 31. While Watergate and Cyprus have dominated the headlines, the Arab-Israeli dispute has continued to simmer beneath the surface. There have been changes in the military realities and political alignments in the area that are likely to have a major impact on the immediate future of the Middle East.

In the opinion of officials here and in Washington, most of the developments do not augur well for peace. On the contrary, they tend to reinforce the grim estimate-held at the highest levels here—that a new round of Middle East fighting is inevitable unless there is substantial political move-

Realistic Conclusions

This prognosis is based on two gloomy but realistic conclusions: · The October war, for all its bloodshed, did nothing to alter or reduce the basic hostility between the Arab states and Israel, Rather than encourage new, more conciliatory attitudes on both sides, the 1973 fighting tended to reinforce the hard-line positions, Israel's doubts about fundamental Arab intentions were strengthened, while the Arah pride and appetite for more triumphs was whetted Rather than opening the way to a political settlement the October fighting renewed the military option as a feasible and potentially profitable alternative for the Arab states. Rather than reduce Israeli fears about the possibility of imminent attack, the war heightened them

· None of the basic political issues that separate the two sides recognition, territory, Jerusalem and the future of the Palestinians-was resolved by the October war. The Arabs still shrink from the crucial step of acknowledging Israel's right to exist, focus on the real merits of the Palestinian claims. Rather than bridge any of these fundamental issues the October war diverted the energy and attention of both sides to the battlefield

In the months since the war, the two sides have been jockeying for position. First they pushed for the best arrangements they could make in the troop-separation agreements cometimes arguing stubbornly over a few hundred yards' difference in the cease-fire line. More recently, they have been maneuvering in eparation for the next negotiating phase and, simultaneously, rehullding their arsenals. Country-by-country, the main devel-opments have included the fol-

· Syria has been receiving huge amounts of new and sophistics ed Soviet arms. Israeli intelligence estimates that more than $2 billion worth of Russian weaponry, including two squadrons of advanced MiG-23 fighter-bombers, has been received and integrated into the Syrian armed forces since October.

As a result, in the Israeli view, Syriz has emerged as the military equal of Egypt, capable for the first time of launching a full-scale war against Israel without assistance from other Arab coun-

The Israelis believe this new Syrian capacity has worked 2 major change in the military balance of power in the area. They have stressed this point to the United States, partly to underscore the urgency of their own pending arms requests, but American officials have said privately that they regard the Israeli estimates of Syrian capability as exaggerated.

· Egypt has also been refurbishing its army, albeit at a less feverish pace, and simultaneously planning the reconstruction of its cities along the Sues Canal. Unlike Syria, which has shown lit-tie interest in political negotiations, Egypt appears to be genuinely prepared for another round of talks with Israel. Its objective is believed to be an Israeli withdrawal from most of the Sinai.

First, however, Egypt must give at least tacit support to the idea of Israeli-Jordanian disengagement of forces, lest it appear to be getting too far ahead in its political accommodations with Israel without due regard for pan-Arab and Palestinian in-

Politically, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat appears to be walk-ing a delicate middle course between support for King Hussein of Jordan as the representative of the Palestinians on the West Bank and increasingly formal recognition of the militant Palestinian Liberation Organization as the representative of all the Palestinian people. Living with such artful contradictions is the hallmark of a skillful Middle Eastern politician.

· Jordan has been attempting to improve its fragile relations with both Egypt and Syria in preparation for the next round of negotiations. King Hussein has been insisting to all who will listen that an Israeli-Jordanian troop-separation agreement must be next on the negotiating agenda.

He has backed up his insistence by threatening to boycott the next round of the Geneva talks unless a troop-separation accord has been concluded first. The King's urgency is partly the result of a fear that, unless he seizes the opportunity now to represent the Palestinians on the West Bank, the Palestinian Liberation Organization may assume that role by default

• Israel has been grappling with the political, economic and psychological fallout of the October war. The 2 1/2-month-old government of Premier Yitshak Rabin has been moving simultaneously to rebuild the armed forces and restore foreign currency reserves depleted by the war. It has also been carefully protecting its small majority in partisment from vigorous stracks by the opposition.

Psychologically, Israelis are still numb from the war and its aftermath. The people seem worn thin by the protracted tension. Tempers are short and the national mood is sour. The generalized anxiety expresses itself in unusually aggressive driving, near riots at football matches and bitter political arguments. It has not been a cheerful summer

Mr. Ford said he was "very disappointed" that the General Motors Corp. had announced a price increase of nearly 10 per cent, or about $500, on its 1975 models. However, no one ap-peared to take the criticism too seriously, certainly not GM, which said it was standing by its

In singling out GM, Mr. Ford clearly recognized price increases by business as a major contributor to the inflationary spiral. Yet, in his speech to Congress on the same day, he quoted, with evident approval, the finding of opinion polls that "people blame government far more than either management or labor for the high cost of everything." He built on this thought by saying later that "it does no good to blame the public for spending too much when the government is spending too much "

Obviously, restraint in government spending is to be one of this administration's catch phrases. This is commendable if only for reasons of improving the cost-effectiveoess of government programs. But in practical terms, the President's commitment to balance the budget in the 1876 fiscal year does nothing to mitigate inflation now. Moreover, it's hard to see how cutting domestic spending will bring down the prices of groceries and gas-oline, which are so influenced by international factors.

Accident Death Rate Drops Slightly in U.S.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18 | AP1.—The 1973 death rate from all types was 55.8 fatalities per 100,000 per-sons, compared with a 1972 rate of 56.2, the National Safety Councis reported.

About 117,000 persons lost their lives in accidents in each of the years, it said. Accident costs last year-including wage losses, medical and insurance outlays and property damage-amounted to 8.93 $41.5 billion, the council reported.

Although the public market is shuttered, bankers hope the recent success of floating-rate notes will permit a reopening along these lines after the August holidays. Although the public rewas not overwhelming. the notes were obviously very appealing to banks; the size of the participations were far smaller than in a traditional bank-syndicated loan and the terms were far more generous in that they included underwriting and selling graup commissions.

However, the major deterrent to a beavy flow of such issues is the fact that most borrowers are rejuctant to commit themselves to a public issue where the rate of interest is not certain and which cannot be prepaid as easily as a hank loan,

At present, all eyes are focused on the Swiss market which, after several months of hiatus, is about to reopeo for foreign borrowerstional market functioning Four foreign issues will be float-

Nevertheless, federal huogetcutting seems to he as popular a cause with President Ford as it is with the businessmen who are among the President's closest friends. But we suspect that sunport for such cuts comes more from political than economic conviction. It is government inter-ference in bealth or housing or education or environmental improvement that conservatives so often oppose. Government spending on highways or national defense has been more acceptable.

Mr. Ford is an avowed fiscal conservative, with a niggardly voting reputation when it comes to extra government spendingexcept for the military. It thus comes natural for him to cast excessive federal spending in the culprit's role in our inflationary

Private Deficits

In an overall economic sense he is, of course, right. Deficit spending must be financed and the extra creation of money that results contributes to demand, But corporations and individuals are also engaged in deficit spending and this mountain of privatesector deht creates its own inflationary forces. One might argue that the government should re-gard itself as a balance wheel, alternately withdrawing or advancing to offset or supplement what business and individuals do.

But this raises the question of national priorities and credit allocation. Should new-car sales be encouraged through easy payment terms or should the government increase aid for mass transit? We doubt that these larger and basic issues will he aired at the President's "economic summit" after Lebor Day. But our choice of economic policy reflects the kind of country we want to have.

Suicidal, Alcoholic Eskimos Begin to Fight Whites' Ways

By Robert Trumbull

Aug. 13 (NYT) -This raw frontier town, where the sidewalks are rough boards and the buildings are on stilts to avoid melting the permafrost, is the sceee of a struggle to establish Eskimo rights as the white man's domination increases in the Canadian Arctic. Inuvik is the symbol and spearhead of an expanding effort of while developers to tap the Far North's oil gas and other resources.

This settlement of about 4,000 people, the largest in the Canadian Arctic, is a waystop on the route to oil and gas exploration sites on the Beaufort Sea and Arctic islands. If the proposed pipeline from northern Alaska though Canada to the United States is built, it will pass by bere, Already 14 air services, including charter and helicopter lines, use the landing strip just outside

Built as a Center

"This was the first community north of the Arctic Circle hullt to pravide the normal facilities of a Canadian town," states an engraved plaque in front of the modern elemeotary school, Inuvik was designed "not only as a base for development and administration," hut also as a center bring education, medical care ann new opportunity to the people of the western Arctic," the inscription says.

The construction of Inuvik, completed in 1961 to plans drawn in Ottawa, altered the basic relationship hetween whites and Eskimos, says Peter Usher, a geographer familiar with Eskimo ways, in a report compiled for an Eskimo rights organization based bere, the Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement. The awkward name is usually shortened to its acrooym; COPE.

Things Changed "When white people first came north, they depended on native people for survival-for food shelter, guiding and traveling, the report states. "When Inuvik was huilt, with a lot of fancy housing and office buildings, things changed." Now the Eskimos became suddealy dependent on the whites. Leaving the old, self-sufficient life of hunting, fishing and trapping, many moved into towns for jobs, mostly with the govern-ment, and for a chance to educate their children in government

But the jobs often turned out to be temporary ooce projects were completed. Many Eskimos began living on welfare payments rather than give up the newly acquired tastes that made them reluctant to return to the igloo village on the frozen tundra, the fishing bole cut through the ice, the trap line and caribou trails in the snow.

Meanwhile, the government encouraged Eskimos to send their children to boarding schools in the towns, where they are educated for the white man's world. This practice has produced a generation gap among Eskimos, sald Dr. Douglas Billingsley, research officer of the Department of Economic Development in the Northwest Territory's govern-coming within little more than a decade, has produced severe social dislocations, according to Nellie Coornoyes, the half-Eskimo, half-Norwegian manager of the Inuvik station of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. "The people saw that they didn't own anything anymore, that everything was geared for

One result, visible along that boardwalks of Inuvik, has been a disastrous outbreak of alcoholism among the Eskimos. Numer-ous official reports note a sharprising incidence of Eskimo suicide-triple the rate 15 years ago, according to one studymore murders and mental breakdowns, all often related to alcobol abuse.

The Last Refuge

The beginning of extensive exploration for nil and gas through-out the Canadian Arctic has threatened the Eskima way of life in its last refuge, the remota northern wastes.

Now the white man is everywhere, with his machines and garbage and destruction," tha COPE says, "Lakes are hissted and the fish and muskrat ara killed. Creeks are blocked and the fish don't run. Maybe tha dozers will scare away the caribou and the foxes."

A concerned government has ordered the postpouement of off-shore drilling in the Beaufort Sea uotil the summer of 1976, when environmental studies ara expected to be complete. Meanwhile, the Geological Survey of Canada has estimated that 6 billion barrels of oil and more than 90 trillion cubic feet of natural gas can be recovered under the Beaufort Sea and the MacKenzie Delta.

"The whites are welcome to the gas and oil, for it is no good to us." sald Sam Raddi, the Eskimo president of COPE. "50 we say take the oil and gas but don't hurt the environment and people."

A TEMPORARY LIFE By David Storey. Dutton. 249 pp. $6.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

THOUGH I'm not at all sure the rail outside one of the case ter reading "A Temporary Life" by British playwright-novelist David Storey, I like it. In some perplexity, I read it a second time, to see whether anything had einded me, thinking that perhaps I had gotten so caught up in the central character that I had not paid sufficient attention to the author's over-all design. Well, I'm no more enlightened, but I still like it.

Known for his novel "This Sporting Life," which was made into a well-regarded film Mr. Storey has a way with mofessional athletes. Colin Freestone, the hero of "A Temporary Life." is a former boxer, now working as an art teacher in a small town in Northern England, He is there because his wife, Yvonne, "wanted to go mad at home," near her mother. As Colin sees it, Yvonne has "worrled" herself into insanity. Worry, he says, "is a kind of food" in the dull town where her mother lives. It is "one of the indispensable ingredients of life."

She worries about "Vietnam, China, India, Africa: children without food, women without men; men with nothing else to do but fight; napalm, insecticides, pollution; vast abstractions that overwhelm her mind, rendering her incapable of dealing with anything at all." For her, "people aren't people any more, they're indecipherable, Indistinguishable elements of some hope-lessly confusing cosmic enter-prise, engineered, manipulated, directed by forces beyond her comprehension."

Though a psychoanalyst would probably regard these as the symptoms rather than the causes of her breakdown, Mr. Storey has given in her a rather good picture of what is usually called the bleeding heart" syndrome. Al-truistic paranoia might be a last pejorative description. Colin's way of looking at things is almost diametrically opposed to Yvonne's. She says, "If no one dealt with the world's suffering, what point would there be in living?" He answers, not cruelly, but matter of factly. "You're

Colin is a feral type, but in repose, like a lion between hunts. Things hardly seem to impinge on him. He reminds me of .. a drama I saw once in the Central Park Zoo: A man was gripping what I'm supposed to feel af-reading "A Temporary Life" his eyes, inoping perheps to stare him down. Most of the fime, Colin is content to let the world carom off him, leaving hints. threats, unacknowledged proffer-ings, littered all around him. In a loguacious age, his noncommittal style is refreshing. Asked what he teaches his students, he answers, only half ironically, "Nothing," adding that he merely attends to "their individusi spiritual requirements." It is not an unfair definition of what often passes for teaching these days. When Yvonne's mo-ther complains, "I don't under-stand half the things you say,"

he replies, equably, "That's right." Skipper Wilcox, the principal of the school, is a character in the tradition of Dickens's comic creations. In an obscure but pe-cultarly effective metaphor he steak the school's "antique" plaster casts, one part at a time, like a felishist, and hides them in his private tollet. (A pum on anality?) When Wilcox invites Colin to supper at his house, he gets a generous helping of the principal's philosophy to compensate for the frugality of the meal. It is im-proper diet, according to Wilcox. that is at the root of the world's

Yvonne, meanwhile, is getting worse. Her mother finds confirmation in the fact that she has grown fat, as if insanity was both visible and palpable. Colin feels that the hospital, with its television, flyers and pictures, mistakenly reproduces the homes that have originally deranged the patients. A tabula rasa, feature-less white rooms as a respite-this is what he feels they need, There's another theme in "A Temporary Life," one in which Mr. Storey is saying something about the razing of old villages to make way for high-rise devel-opment. The fact that the head of the developers is a Machiavellian type who encourages his wife to play infidelity games with Col-in, implies. I suppose, that the author disapproves of such changes. It is to Colin's credit that he declines his mistress's daughter, for no other reason than to demonstrate that youth is not irresistible. When Colin's latent ferocity flares up briefly, he loses his 10b at the art school and becomes a street cleaner. Another character; commenting on this rather extreme gesture, describes it as "euphoria." Colin replies with characteristic inscrutability: "I believe," he says, "in the principle that you should pay people not to work. Then the ones who do work would do it for purely equitable reasons." As I said, he pus-zies me, but I am sufficiently taken by the book to believe that professional boxers turned art teachers are capable of talking like that.

The difference between sharp, tactical opening variations and more tranquil sitional lines of play is that between aiming for a quick decision and postponing the main struggle for the middle

Emanuel Lasker, world champion from 1894 to 1921, usually preferred the second course because he did not want to spend limitless hours on the close analysis of the latest nuances perpetually parading across the petualry paraming across the tournament arena. Thus, he teamed heavily on the conservative, if not stodgy, Orthodox Defense to the Queen's Gambit, content that his inventive genius could still create exerting middlesame perspectives from it.

But nowadays the link be-tween opening and middle-game strategy having been carefully studied, it has be-come evident that initially stodgy play only gives rise to more of the same later. Consequently, it is the hypertense openings such as the King's Indian and the Sicilian Defenses that how the ian Defenses that hog the Iimelight.

Ferr Today, Bomb Tomogrow. In these, the viability of an entire variation may hang on the slim thread of a single tactical theme; if the critical combination can be thwarted, ekirted or multified, yesterday's successful defense becomes today's disaster.

That's what happened in the game between Anthony Saidy and Kim Commons in the recent United States Championship.

TORONTO. Aug. 18 (AP).-Top-seeded Chris Evert of the United States overcame a tedious lobbing game by Julie Heldman yesterday to win the women's singles final, 6-0, 6-3, in the Canadisn Open Tennis Tournament. The match was never close, although Heldmau managed to unsteady Evert with lobbing tartics in the second set.

"She played tougher in the secand set and I think her lobbing discouraged me," said Evert, who admitted she was getting a hit impatient. "I couldn't hit win-ners off her lobbing." In .men's singles semilinals,

It Really Didn't Work

By Russell Baker

have announced that 'the system worked" in the recent presidential affair that we are in danger of believing it. Survivors' euphoria probably accounts for the rosy judgments. but, when the giddiness has subsided, it will propably be seen that the system, in fact, failed alcompletely HUOSE from beginning to end. If things have ended happily, which is by no means certain.

we can thank fate for a felicitous whim. For the system constantly nudged us toward increasingly grotesque outcomes from which we were saved by sheerest luck.

Even with the luck, the outcome produced by the system is a political absurdity in a nation boastful of its democracy. What do we have as the logical, legal product of the system's working? A President who has never run for national office and who, when his party last worried about going to the people, was not even considered a useful candidate for the dim office of vice-

The system lelt the choosing of this new president to his predecessor, a man driven from office by bipartisan suspicion of felonious conduct, a man whose previous selection at the vicepresident shop had earlier been driven from office for taking cash under the desk and cheating on his income tax.

If, despite all, this President is a happy choice, we have only luck to thank—certainly not the system. We are told that Gerald Ford was not President Nixon's first choice for the job after Agnew had been cashiered. His first choice is said to have been John Connally.

One hesikites to say for a certainty that Connally would have been approved by Congress, for the nomination would have produced political resentment in both parties. Yet Congress also believes in the system and the odds were that it would have accepted Connally had Nixon made the fight.

If so, the sysiem would have produced its ultimate piece of grand guignol-the spectacle of Vice-President Connaily pleading not guilty to charges of taking a bribe as secretary of the Treasury while, simultaneously, President Nixon was resigning from the White House to avoid im-

AMERICA CALLING

NEW YORK So many people dissuaded Nevon from making the Connally appointment by using the argument that it would create more political tensions than the President needed just then. Thus, Laird becomes one of the lucky accidents that saved us from the full catastrophe that was being blandly cooked up hy the system.

And now of course, we have the system about to give us yet another vice-president not subject to voter approval, a vicepresident selected by a man who wasn't, himself, elected by anybody. In the world's greatest democracy, as we fondly call it. the system gives us government by appointment only.

The system's failures do not begin and end with the exotic transition. If they did. solution would be easy. We could provide for interim national elections on occasions such as this and give democratic legitimacy to governments like Ford's.

But the system doesn't work much better in elections either. It creaked dismally in 1972. The system made it possible for the White House to manipulate the Democratic choice of presidential candidate, and, then, thanks to the system's way of conducting elections, gave us a stacked-deck choice between Nixon and the man he most wanted to run

The system's informational machinery failed to communicate any idea of Nixon the man. How else explain the fact that, after a quarter century of full exposure to the American public. he was the nation's overwhelming favorite in 1972, vet had a popular majority willing to see him impeached less than two years later? Something somewhere didn't get itself commu-

Courts and Congress worked beautifully, we are told. This is arguable, too. What really worked beautifully were the White House tape recorders.

No one believes that without the tapes Congress or courts would have had any systematic machinery for defenestrating the President, and the tapes were most definitely not a part of the system. Everything about them was pure luck.

Under the system, we have been cheated in a presidential election, submitted to nearly two years of government by men of criminal productivity and en-couraged to feel delighted with the prospect of two more years of government by men we have not elected.

If your car worked as well as the system, you would have had eachment. it in the shop ages ago, if not Melvin Laird is said to have on the used car lot.

King Henri Christophe's Citadel, built 150 years ago.

Crumbling Monument to Megalomania in Haiti

By Stanley Meisler

CAPE HAITIEN, Halti.—There are cracks in the Citadel, that grand and neglected fortress built 150 years ago by King Henri Christophe of Haiti in the middle of nowhere to protect little but his

"If nothing is done, it is going to crumble," said Albert Mangones, one of Haiti's leading architects and the government curator of monuments. "Maybe today. Maybe six years from now." If it crumbles, Mr. Mangones said, not only Haiti but the world will lose one of the great architectural and engineering achievements of the 19th century.

"This was a very poor period in the world for great architecture," he continued. "Yet we have the Citadel here in Baiti. The more I look at the thing, the more flabbergasted I am."

Mountain Top

The Citadel, all stone and brick, is perched on the top of a 3,000-foot mountain a dozen miles from the sea on the northern coast of Haiti

The fortress seems almost as impregnable now to tourists as it would have been to invaders a century and a half ago. No car can reach it. To get there, you must travel along a mountain trail on a scrambling mule or horse for about an hour and a half. Some tourists never try. .

More than halfway up, after a turn in the trail, the guides ery out "Look, sir, the Citadel." It sounds like the most banal line from the most banal Hollywood epic. But the Citadel is now in view, and the sight is far from banal.

You see a great prow, much like the prow of a giant ocean liner, with a castle behing it. The immensity of it all—the prow is 120 feet high and 15 thick-becomes more apparent as you come closer. And the problem becomes more apparent as The cracks begin to show, jagging

Thanks largely to Mr. Mangones, a few steps are being taken that may lead to restoration of the Citadel. "I manipulated so many people," he said. "I have been talking like a madman for 15 years." The Organization of American States has sent a team of architects to Haiti to join a local architect in preparing a survey of the Citadel and of what needs to be done to restore it. The team is also surveying Sans Souch the ruins of the palace that Henri Christophe huilt for himself at the foothills of the mountains. The Haitian architect working on the survey is Frederick Mangones, the son of Aibert and, like his father, a graduate of Cornell University. Once the survey is completed, the Haitlans plan to use it as the basis of a worldwide appeal for funds to restore the Citadel. "A buge monument is crumbling," Albert Mangones said, "and we need help. So we are telling everyone exactly what we have here." His son estimated that the cost of restoring the Citadel would come to at least a million dollars. The Citedel is a monument to the maga-Iomania of Henri Christophe, that strange black man who ruled northern Haiti from 1806 to 1820. Albert Mangones, however. prefers to call it "a fantastic gesture of will to assert and prove."

Christophe, a slave born on the English island of St. Christopher, had fought in the rebellion that won independence from France for the blacks and mulattoes of Haiti. He had expected to succeed Jean-Jacques Dessalines as ruler of Haiti, but the mulattoes tried to keep full power from Christophe. Enraged, he retreated to the north to rule there.

His reign resembled those of a few modern African potentates. He relied on white advisers, yet persecuted white busi-nessmen. He allowed no dissent. He made himself a king and created a fancy and functful court of titles and trimmings. He built enormous monuments like the Citadel, mostly for the giory of himself, but also for the giory of black people in a hostile, white world.

Playwright Eugene O'Neill put some of the character of Henri Christophe into the protagonist of "The Emperor Jones."

Out of Range

Ostensibly out of fear of a new Prench invasion, King Henri built the Citadel. From the prow, the soldiers inside could look down upon the sea and the kings' capital, the port now called Cap Haitien. But the sea and town were out of range of their cannons, imported from Europe. The Citadel could not protect itself or the King. In case of 2 French invasion, the Haitians would burn Cap Haitien and retreat to the mountains. Henri would retreat to the Citadel and defend himself there for years. Although the bricks could be made in tilns on the spot, all the stone had to be dragged up the mountain, along with the 360 carmons. Legend has it that thousands of Haitians died while working on the monumental project. The construction went on for most of Henri's reign and, in fact, was not completed when he died. It was never used in warfare. A biographer of Henri Christophe, Hubert Cole, says that German military engineers designed and supervised construction of the Citadel. But no one is named. And Mr. Cole's theory is not accepted by all historians. Albert Mangone considers it a mystery as wondrons as the Citadel itself that the architect who designed it does not have a place in history. "The man was obviously at the top of the mastery of his art," he said. In 1820, paralyzed and faced with rebellion King Henri shot himself to death in his Sans Souci Palace at the age of 53. According to legend, the King used a silver bullet. The legend of the silver bullet was fortified by O'Neill in his play. Henri Christophe's body was taken to the Citadel and buried in an open lime him there. It was later removed and buried elsewhere.

In 150 years, the Citadel has not proven impregnable to time and weather. Frederick Mangones is must concerned about the prow, the main bastion of the Citadel. It pace had a wooden roof, but that disintegrated long ago. Water has seeped into the stone, brick and mortar, creating the stresses that are cracking the walls. Mr. Mangones said that a small earthquake would send the walls tumbling. "If we lose this," he said, "we lose the Cita-del." By drilling holes through the walls of the prow and inserting a cable, he said, stresses could be created to hold the walls
